Comments: I am amazed not to have been consulted informally or formally regarding this planning application, which I found out about only after a party wall surveyor wrote to me about it.

That is despite the fact that it appears to involve demolishing a party wall which is a key feature of our patio, and replacing it with a grotesque engineering brick (higher) wall that goes completely against the style of this conservation area.

This aspect of the development is described as the replacement of an infill extension. The current structure is not an extension. It is a garden hut created by slinging a hut-style roof between the house at 35 and the party wall.

I object.
