Comments: The Horse Chestnut, T9, does have a TPO [Number 856 on the list]. In the Planning Inspector's enquiry of a few years ago, it was our understanding that it was agreed to leave it be for the following reasons: It is a fine Veteran Tree of great visual amenity, and of course great bio-diversity to local flora and bird life, some of whom seem to be building nests in the upper branches. It seems a healthy and still vigorous specimen, with no signs of Bleeding Canker that the TTfH can discover. The recent heavy pollarding hasn't done it much good, but it seems to have survived the work remarkably well, and is a safer tree because of it. The Developers have been working hard for years to get this fine tree removed, but it actually presents little problem to the builders, and provided the rules are obeyed with regard to protective barriers to stop damage and compaction within the RPA are observed, this fine tree, though showing some signs of decay, should have years of useful and beautiful life left..
