Comments: This is a Victorian facade of a house in a conservation area and for that reason the replacement of timber with UPVC should not be permitted. Not only does UPVC degrade the visual character of the house and the terrace it forms part of but is extremely bad for the environment. The existing timber sash windows can usually be restored or if irreperable they should be replaced with new timber sash windows. My comments do not apply to the rear of the house as the sashes there appear to have been removed but on environmental grounds the owner should at least consider timber replacements for that elevation as well. Double glazed timber sashes are also available I believe.
